RitterGerhard A. His conclusion is that the size of organisations, the complexity of its duties and responsibilities and the need for quick decisions are the causes for this development. Where the membership of elite once depended on wealth and origin, it would now appear that the capability and ambition of individuals are the determining factors allowing entry to the elite, which is thus equally open to all strata Hartmann

Email your librarian or administrator to recommend adding this journal to your organisation's collection. Mosca also points out that the elite in earlier times was formed by the physically strong, whereas in the present time the rich form the elite. Another controversial and current debate, which is also of interest, is the so called Exzellenzinitiative of the German government, which explicitly aims to support the development of elite.
