It takes a mature community to create the safe space where a culture of confession is celebrated, where being honest is the expectation. True community requires sacrifice. Stay when we fail or are betrayed.

To belong to many communities, especially Christian communities, requires

Somehow we imagine this cosmetic version of community that only highlights and celebrates the best of us, while in true communities the worst of ourselves inevitably emerges—offering our community and ourselves a chance to learn to love and accept. For in brokenness, our woundedness is best addressed, our fears are calmed, our shame is lifted, and love is extended.
Being authentically human means you will fail. I am grateful to them and to the author for the opportunity to review and reflect on the ideas that Mr. The Rest of the Story:
