Numerous theories have been put forward to account for the unexplained deaths, including animal attacks, hypothermia, avalanche infrasound -induced panic, military involvement, or some combination of. Fanny rated it it was amazing Apr 25, After the group's bodies were discovered, an investigation by Soviet Union authorities determined that six had died from hypothermia while the other three showed signs of physical trauma.

A month later their corpses were found, maimed and broken by wild forces. Nevertheless, the reconstruction of the face along the exhumed skull coincides with the post-war photographs of Semyon, although journalists express suspicions that another person was hiding under the name of Semyon Zolotarev after the war. At the forest's edge, under a large siberian pine in popular parlance it is called "cedar" the searchers found the visible remains of a small fire. Three of the ski hikers had fatal injuries:

On 28 January, one of the members, Yuri Yudin, who suffered from several health problems, died of internal damage with comparably less external trauma.
