Spanish has three forms for the singular definite article: el masculine, la feminine, and lo neuter. This also applies when the verb is in other tenses: . Another typical difference concerned the result of Latin - l - and - n - in intervocalic position: .

On some occasions, the personal infinitive can hardly be replaced by a finite verb.

This edition is for Level 2 vocabulary, where the higher the level number, the more complicated the vocabulary.

Dialectally, there are Spanish dialects with a greater number of vowels, with some as Murcian and Eastern Andalusian reaching up to 8 to 10 vowel sounds. In other Brazilian dialects, only stressed vowels can be nasalized this way.

The possessive adjectives are normally preceded by a definite article in Portuguese. The pronunciation of the unstressed vowels does not differ much from that of stressed vowels.
