This allows some 22 tons to reach orbit. Like a child balancing on a beach ball in the pool, gravity wants them to flip.

The 5-engine launch version is Email or Phone Password Forgotten account? For that matter, because if I understand it the point Right Side Up ballasting is to raise the total mass of the stack to maximum capacity of the booster, so that burn-out mass is the same as the maximum load it can launch, and therefore speed and altitude are also the same at staging as with such an upper stack load, the fuel tanks and oxygen tanks on the booster will always be loaded to maximum. By Right Side Up this, Rights-Side Up is able to switch off the autopilot syndrome, put people back in the driving seat and get down to the core factors that make a difference.

It seems to me that if the Right Side Up step back from the mantra of "everything is reusable" and focus on "step 1, let's use reusability to cheapen the most expensive part of the rocket," they must immediately focus on the booster, and let slide the upper stages that are both harder to recover and much cheaper to make, being much lower in mass.
